SAN FRANCISCO, Calif. (BUSINESS WIRE) - March 16, 2016 - One of the largest conferences in the U.S. for social, financial and environmental sustainability + impact investing, Sustainatopia offers over 250 speakers from around the country, as well as more than fifty Fortune 500 companies, plus a special program for social entrepreneurs.

"The growth of impact investing marks a fundamental, positive shift for Clean Technology Corporate and Renewable Project Financing. The renewed confidence in and availability of funds for environmentally responsible businesses and projects are being enabled by two key drivers: 1) cleantech companies, having proven technologies, are now laying out solid plans for longevity via sizable total addressable markets that continue to expand; 2) financial institutions are more knowledgeable than ever on what makes a clean tech company or projects bankable. This enables companies to access the capital markets at a lower cost which drives higher returns and enterprise value forward," said Roy Schwartz, Director of Project Financing at Clean Power Capital. "As financial institutions focus on the triple bottom line (people, planet, profit), there are more funding sources with reasonable terms competing for quality opportunities in investment-grade technology and projects that further environmental sustainability than at any time in the last 30 years. Clean Power Capital is excited to attend and participate in a landmark, triple bottom line oriented event that brings together the global ecosystem of social, financial and environmental sustainability and impact like no other singular event."

This year join industry leaders including Jason Rissman (IDEO), Olivia Khalili (Yahoo for Good), Clifford Thomas (Cisco), Verity Chager (Blackrock), Evan Harvey (Nasdaq), Alexander von Welczeck (Sky H2O) and many more speakers at this year's Sustainatopia.

Roy Schwartz, Director of Project Financing at Clean Power Capital, will be participating on the panel "Innovative Financial Models Within Renewable Energy" and Alexander von Welczeck, President & CEO of SkyH2O and Managing Partner of Clean Power Capital, will be speaking on the panel "Understanding Private Equity Deals in Clean Tech".

This year's conference offers six tracks:

- Ecosystem of Impact + SRI Investing
- Sustainable Strategies & Innovation (Fortune 500 Companies)
- Clean Technology & Smart Cities
- Empowering Women Through Investment - Health & Impact Tech
- Millennials 100
- Lifestyles of Health & Sustainability (LOHAS)
